As television reporter April O'Neil left work one night, she saw some robbers in the Channel 6 parking lot.

"Bad timing, lady," said one of the robbers when he saw April.

"You're telling me!" she cried. "Help!" Suddenly a dagger came flying through the air. It smashed the streetlight above.

Everything went black. It wasn't until the police arrived that April saw her attackers.

The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles had struck again!

The next night April received a scary warning.

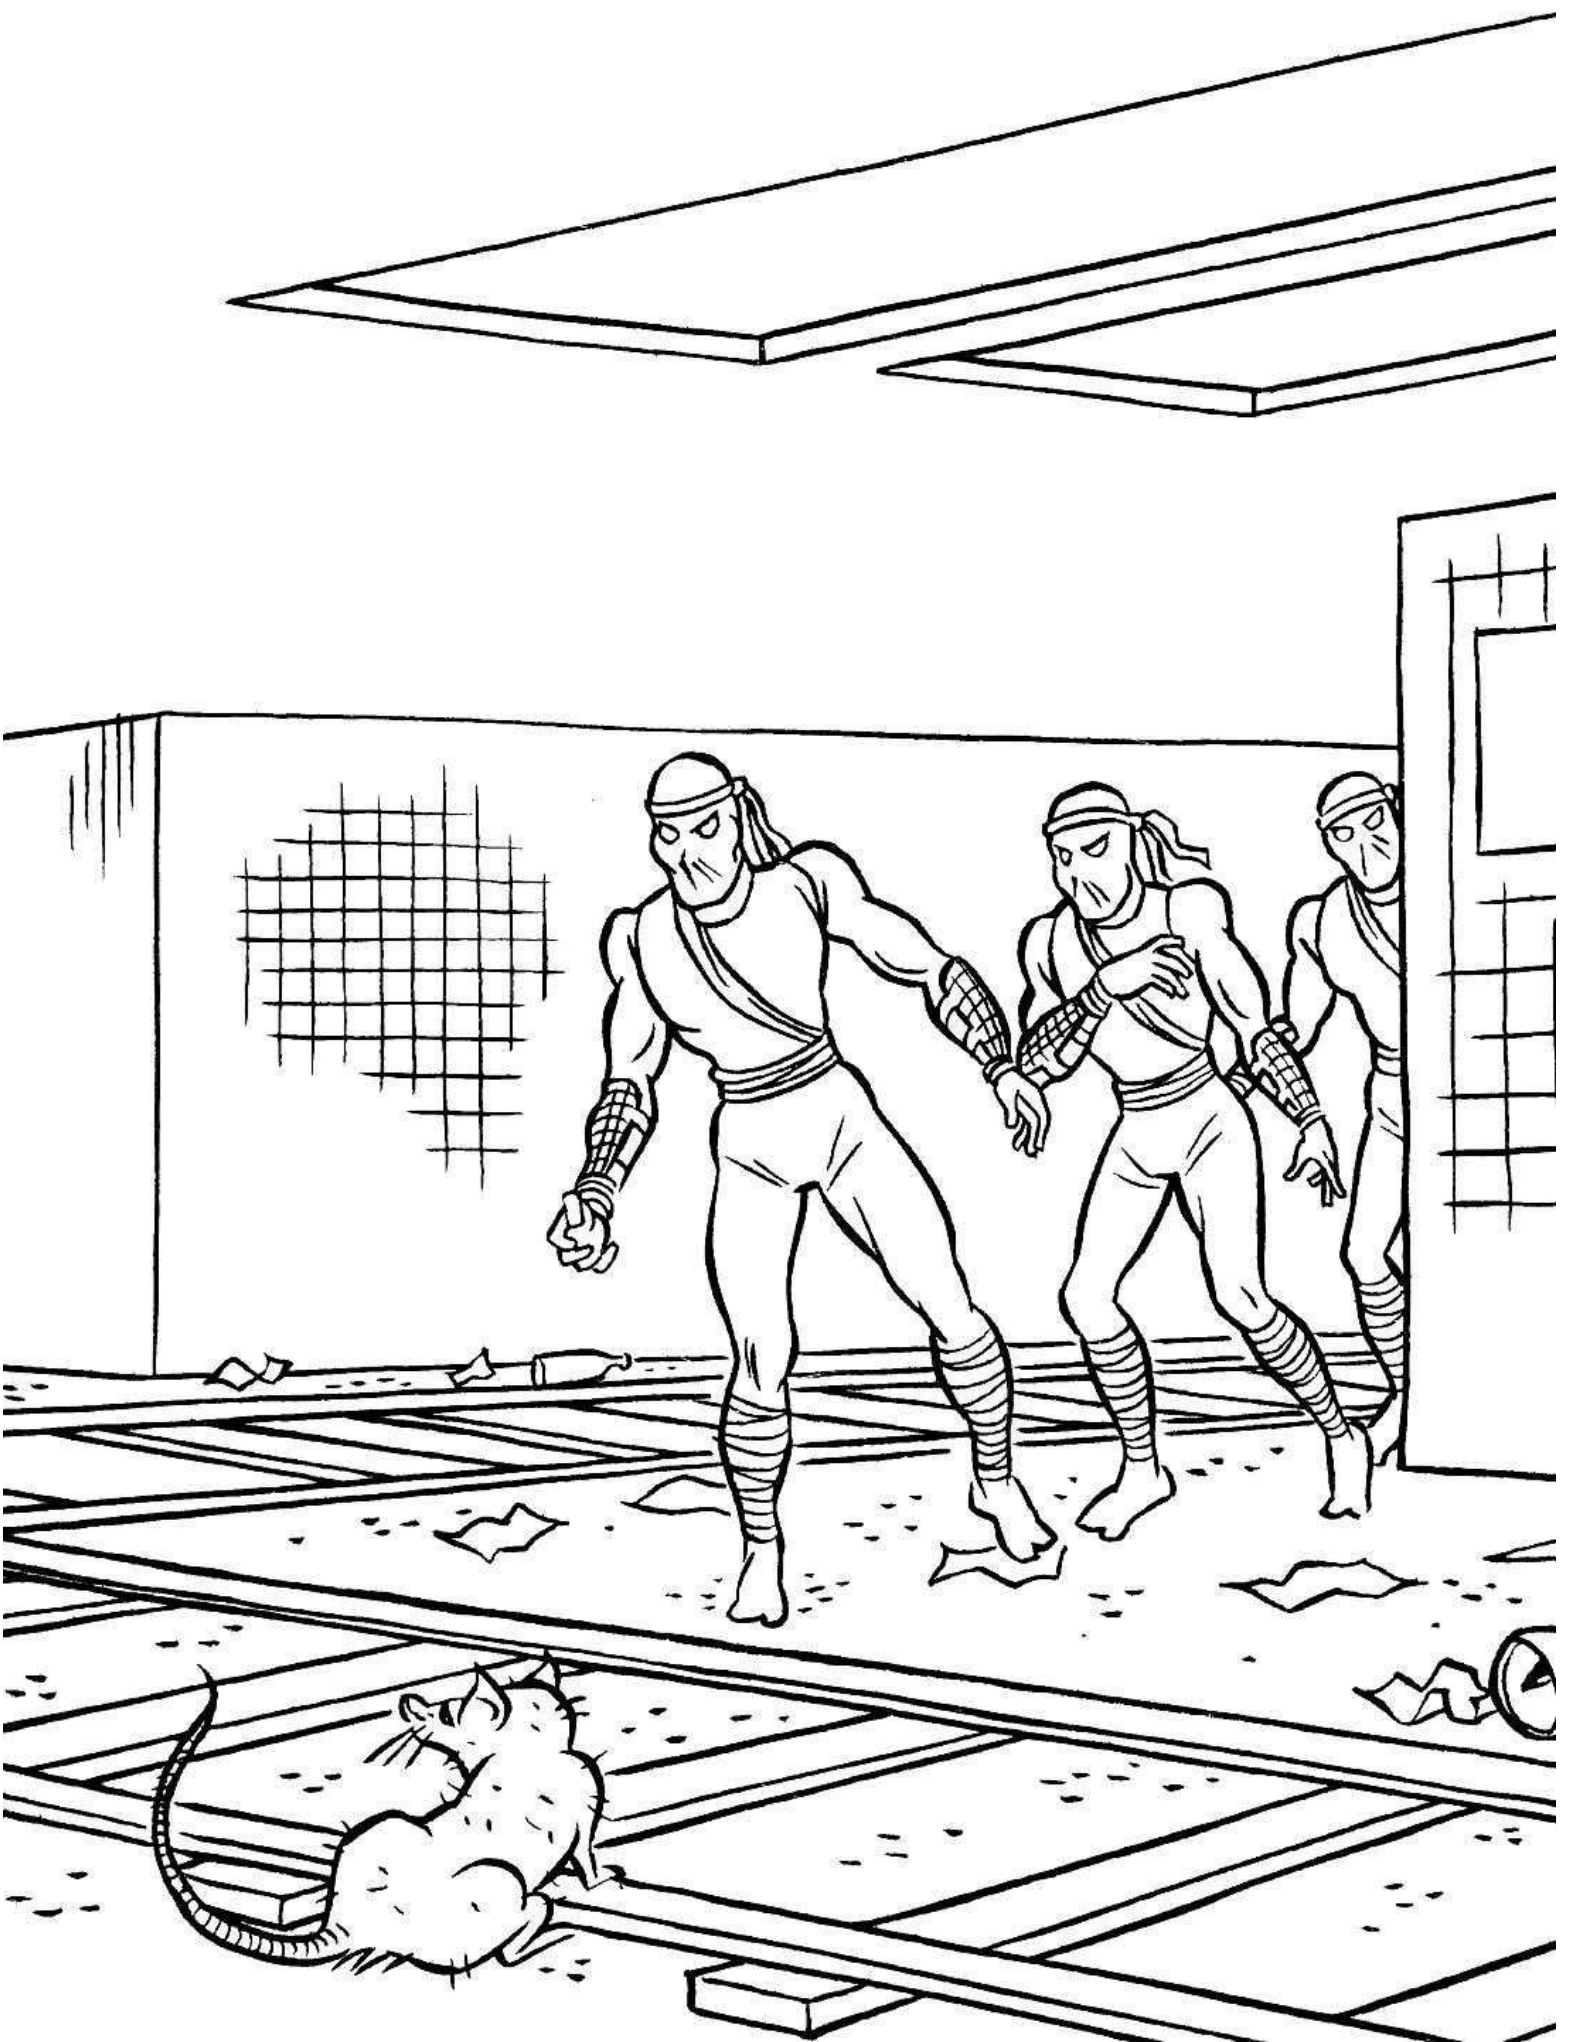
"We've been looking for you, Miss O'Neil," said a man in a ninja jumpsuit. "We want you to mind your own business!"

Out from the darkness stepped Raphael. He'd been worried about April and had followed her.

Suddenly a train pulled into the station. Raphael grabbed April and jumped onto the tracks.

The two hid in a crawlspace. When the train had passed, Raphael carried April down the dark tunnel.

He didn't know that he was being followed.



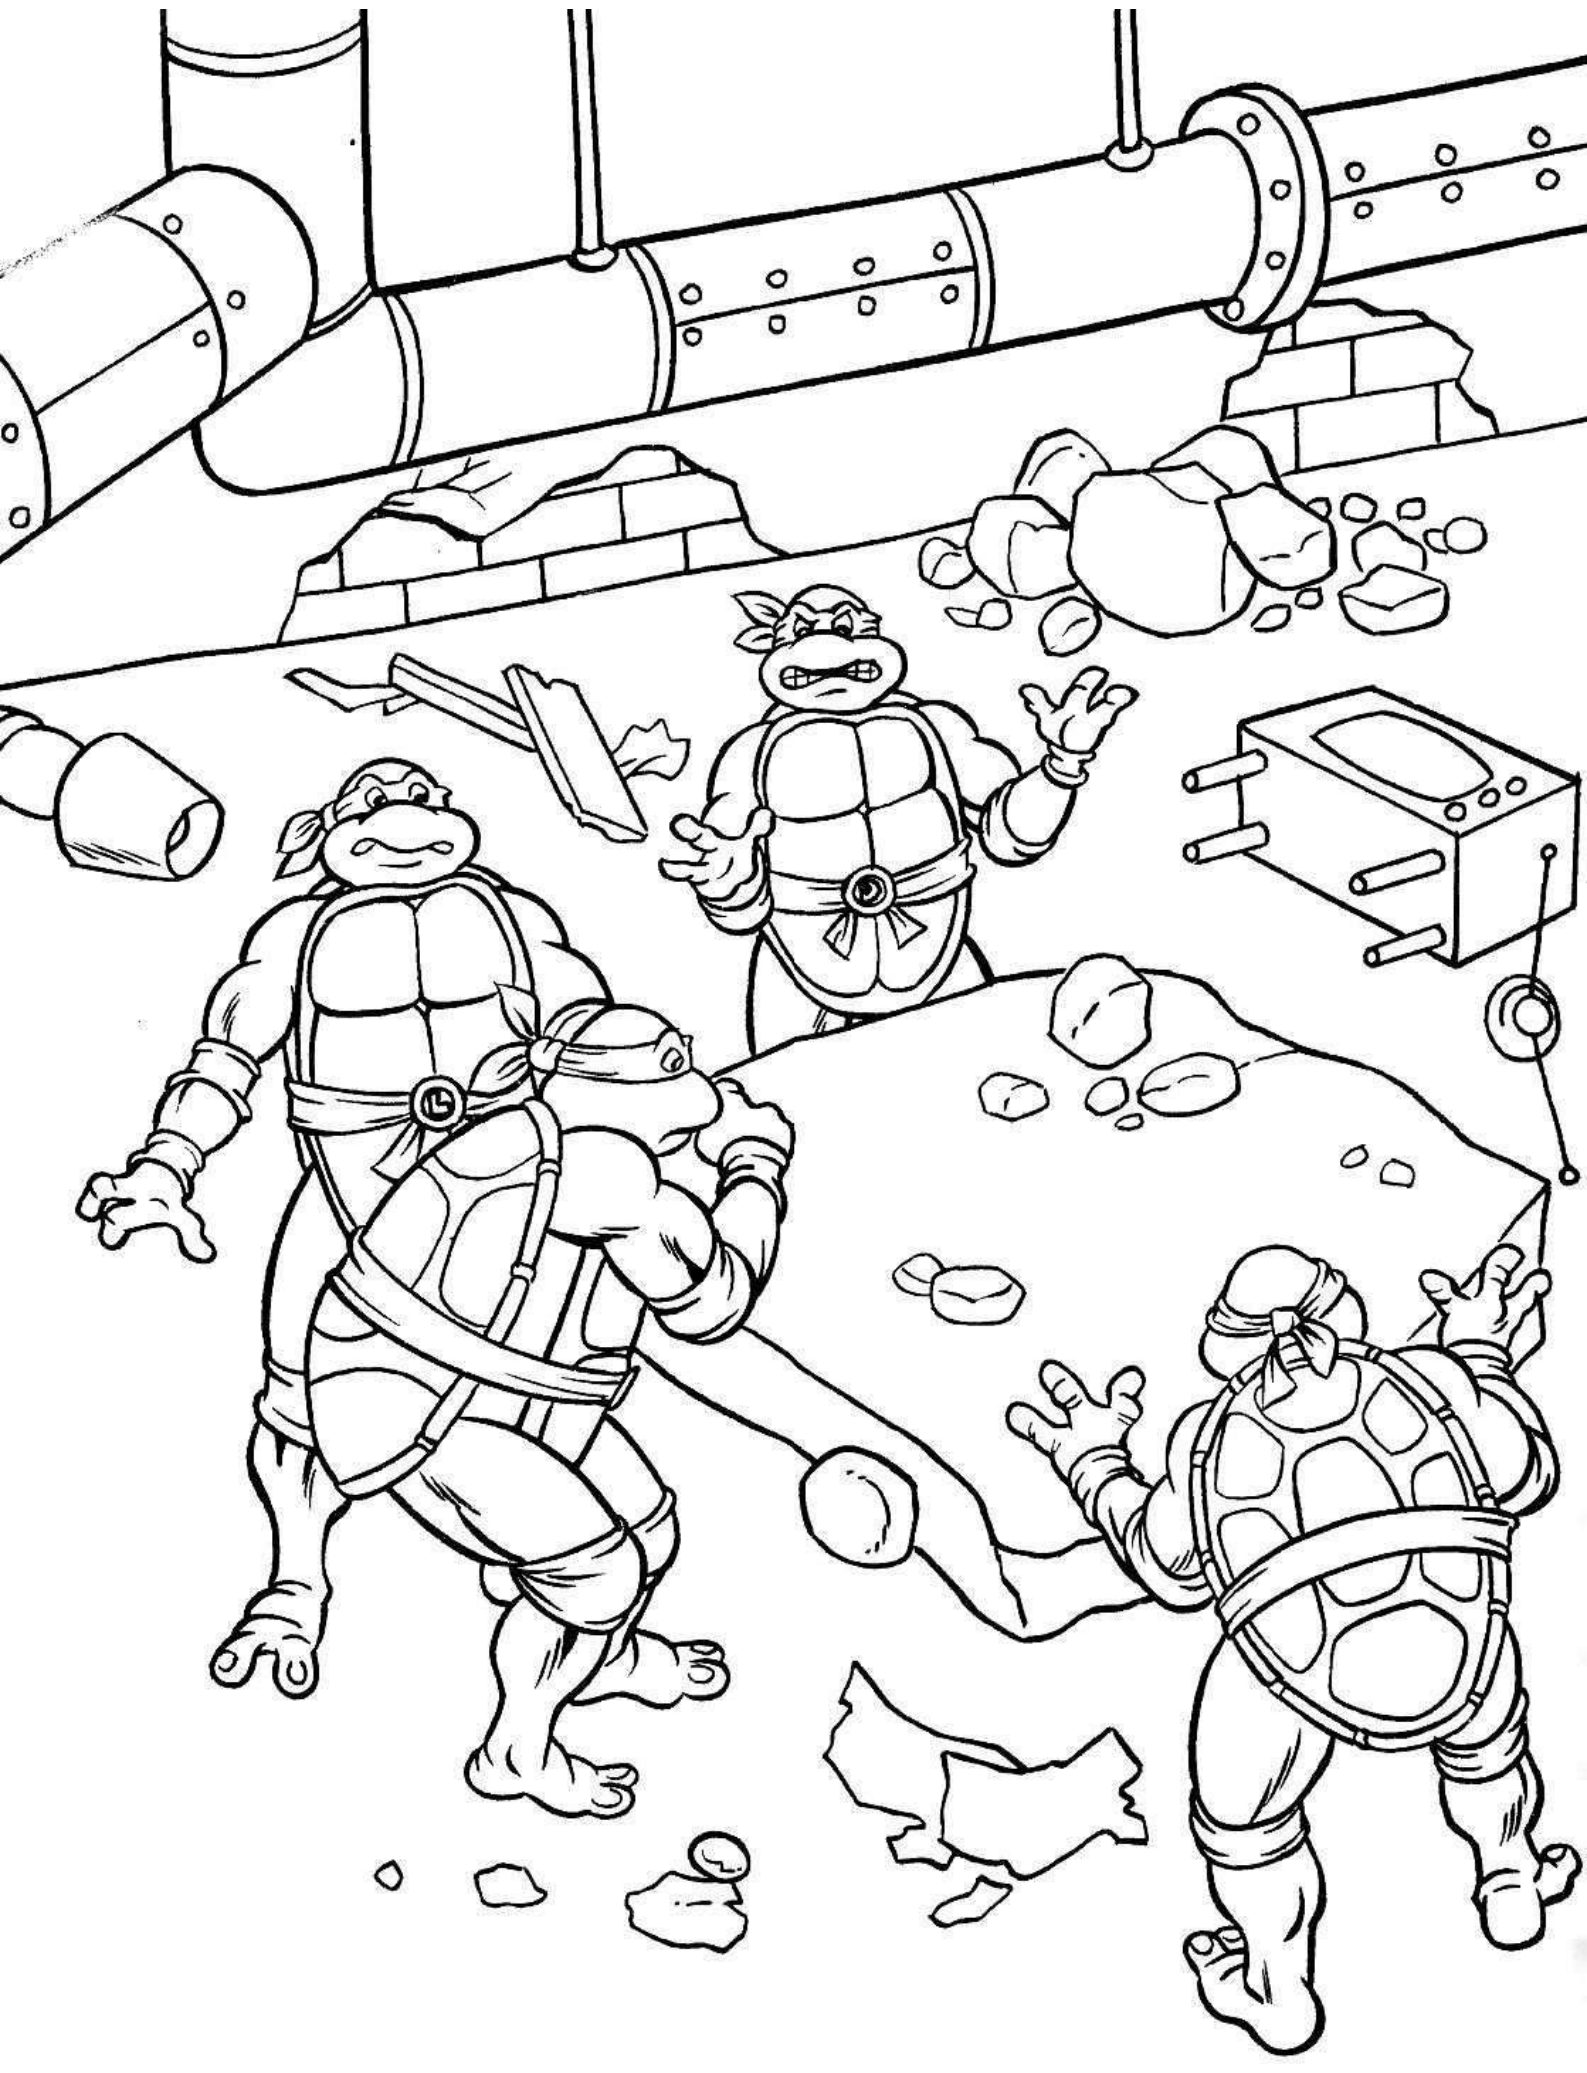
"Herb jar. Cold washcloth. Pillow," ordered the turtles' friend Splinter as Raphael placed April on the turtles' couch.

"Ahhhhhh!" screamed April when she woke to see the turtles and Splinter.

"Arghhhhh!" screamed Michaelangelo.

Splinter sat on the couch beside April. "Please calm yourself," he said. "I will explain to you who we are...."

"I'm sorry I was frightened," said April as the turtles walked her home. "Thank you for all you've done."



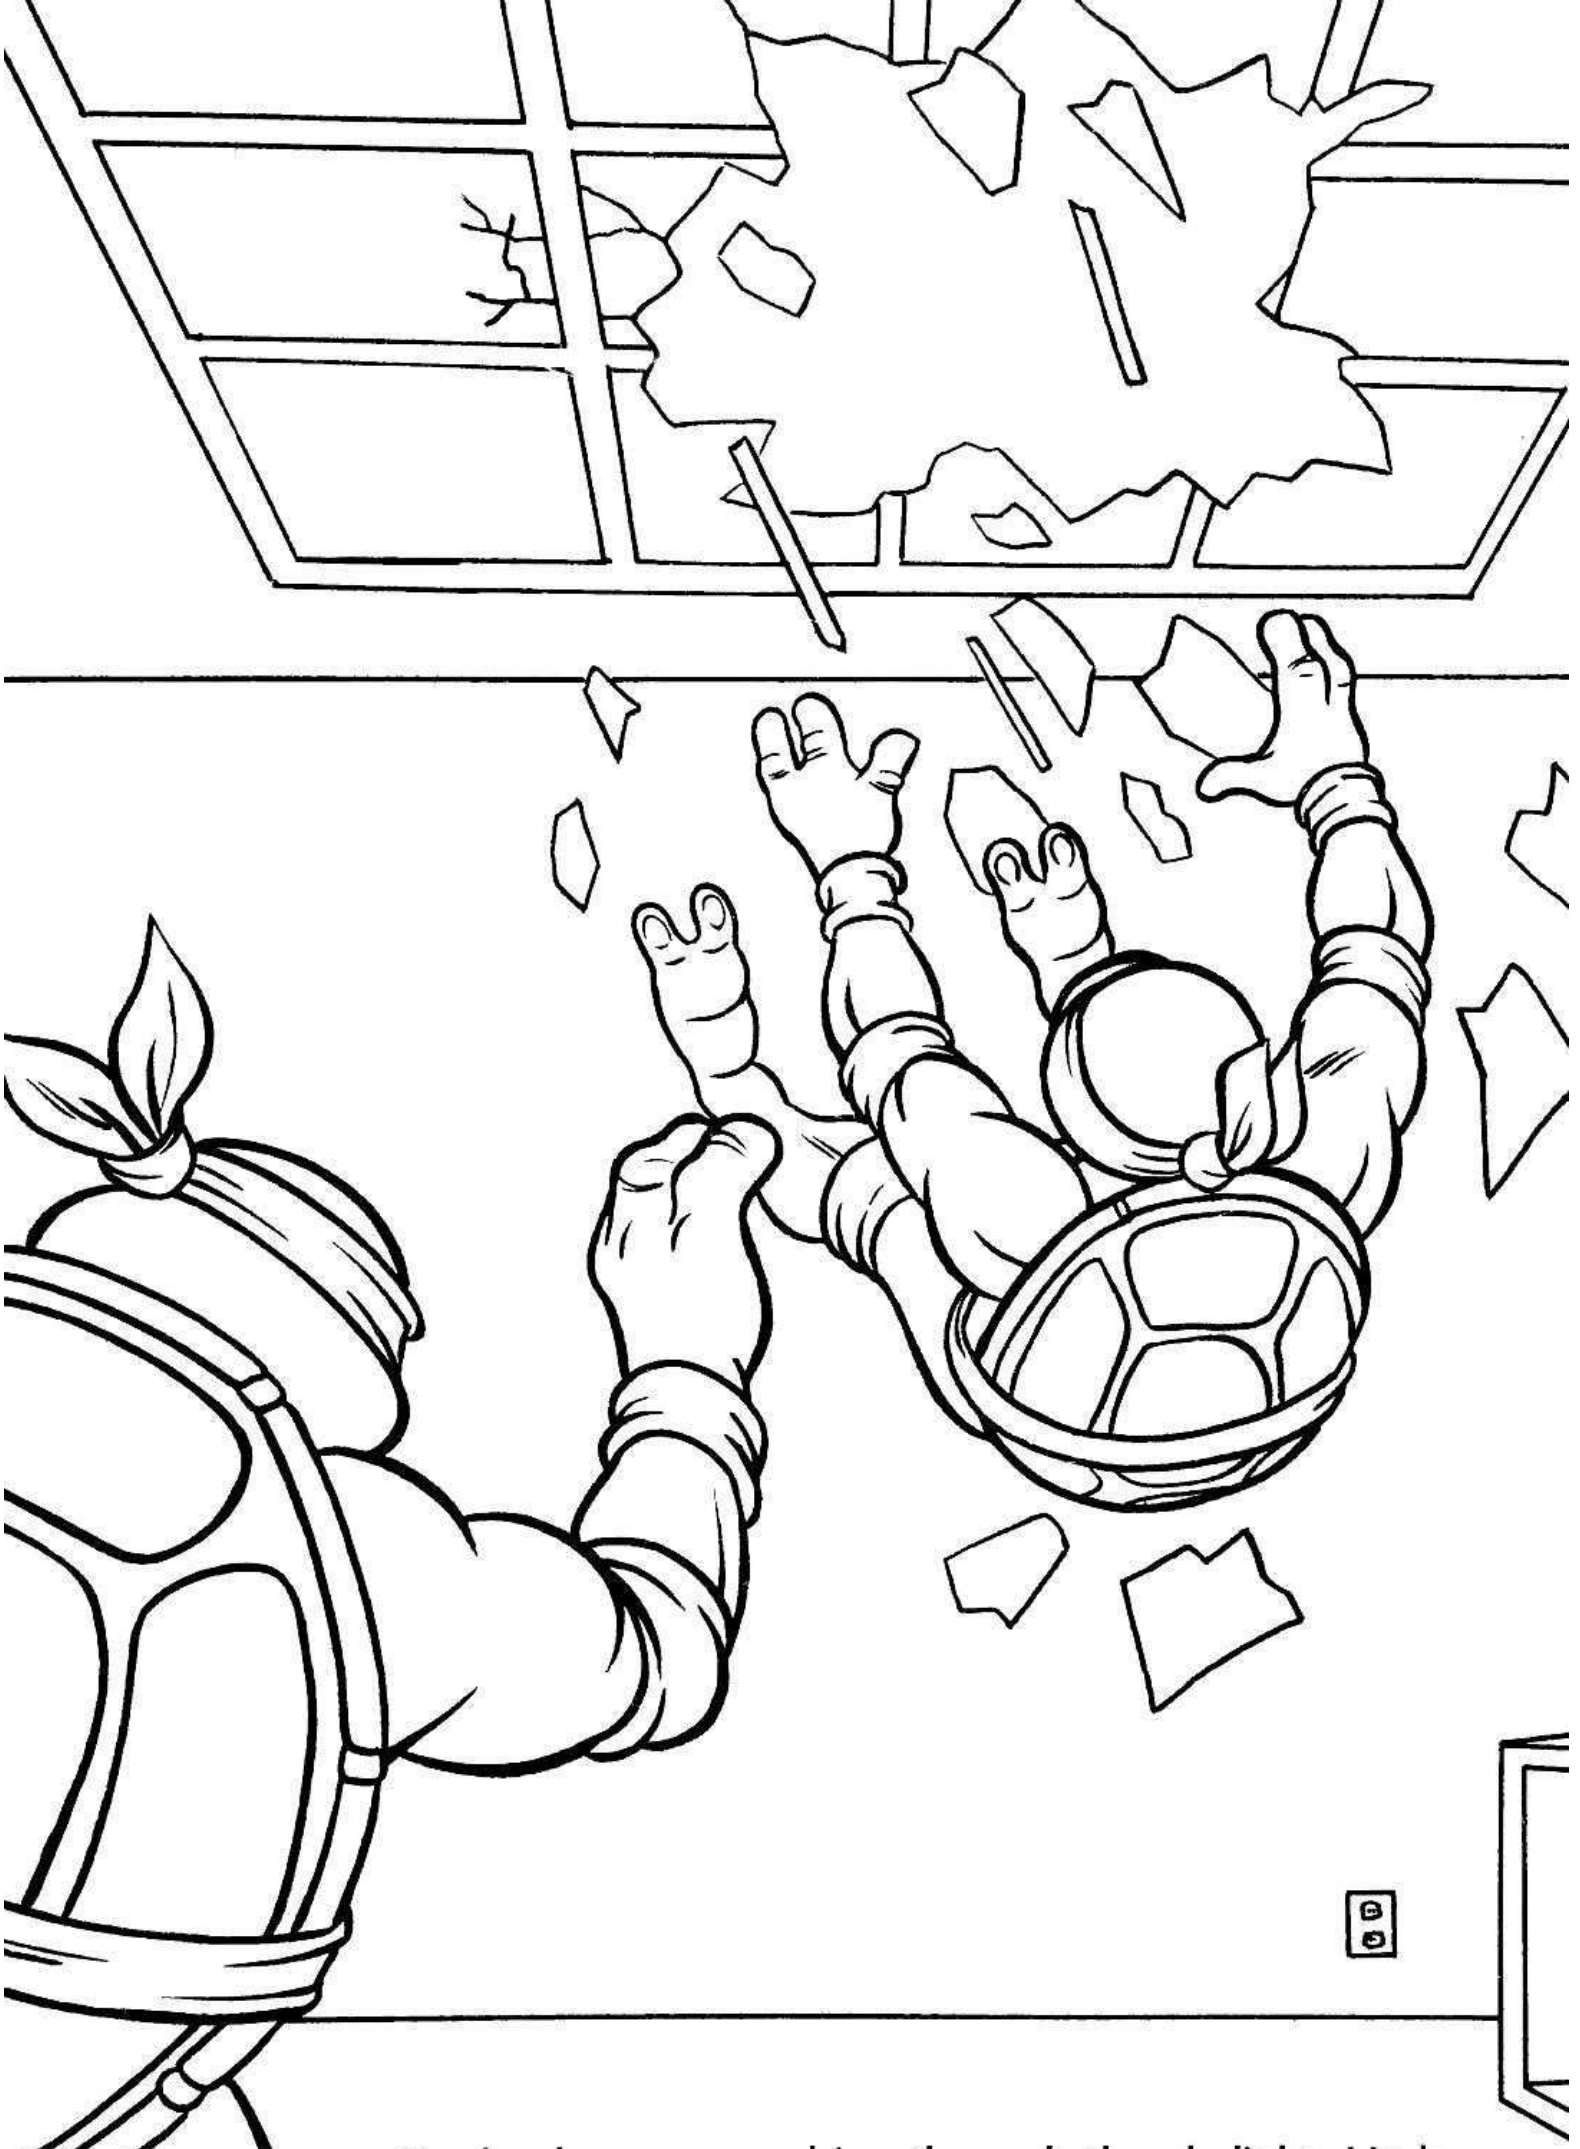
The turtles returned to find their home destroyed—and Splinter gone!

Meanwhile, on the other side of town, Splinter was being held captive by the evil ninja gang leader Shredder.

"Who are these meddlesome mutants?" Shredder yelled. "And who are you?"

The turtles went to ask April for advice. Raphael was too upset to talk, so he sat on the roof of April's building.

April and the three turtles were talking when suddenly...CRASH!



Raphael came smashing through the skylight. He lay very still.

Through the window came dozens of ninjas with big clubs. The turtles leapt into battle.

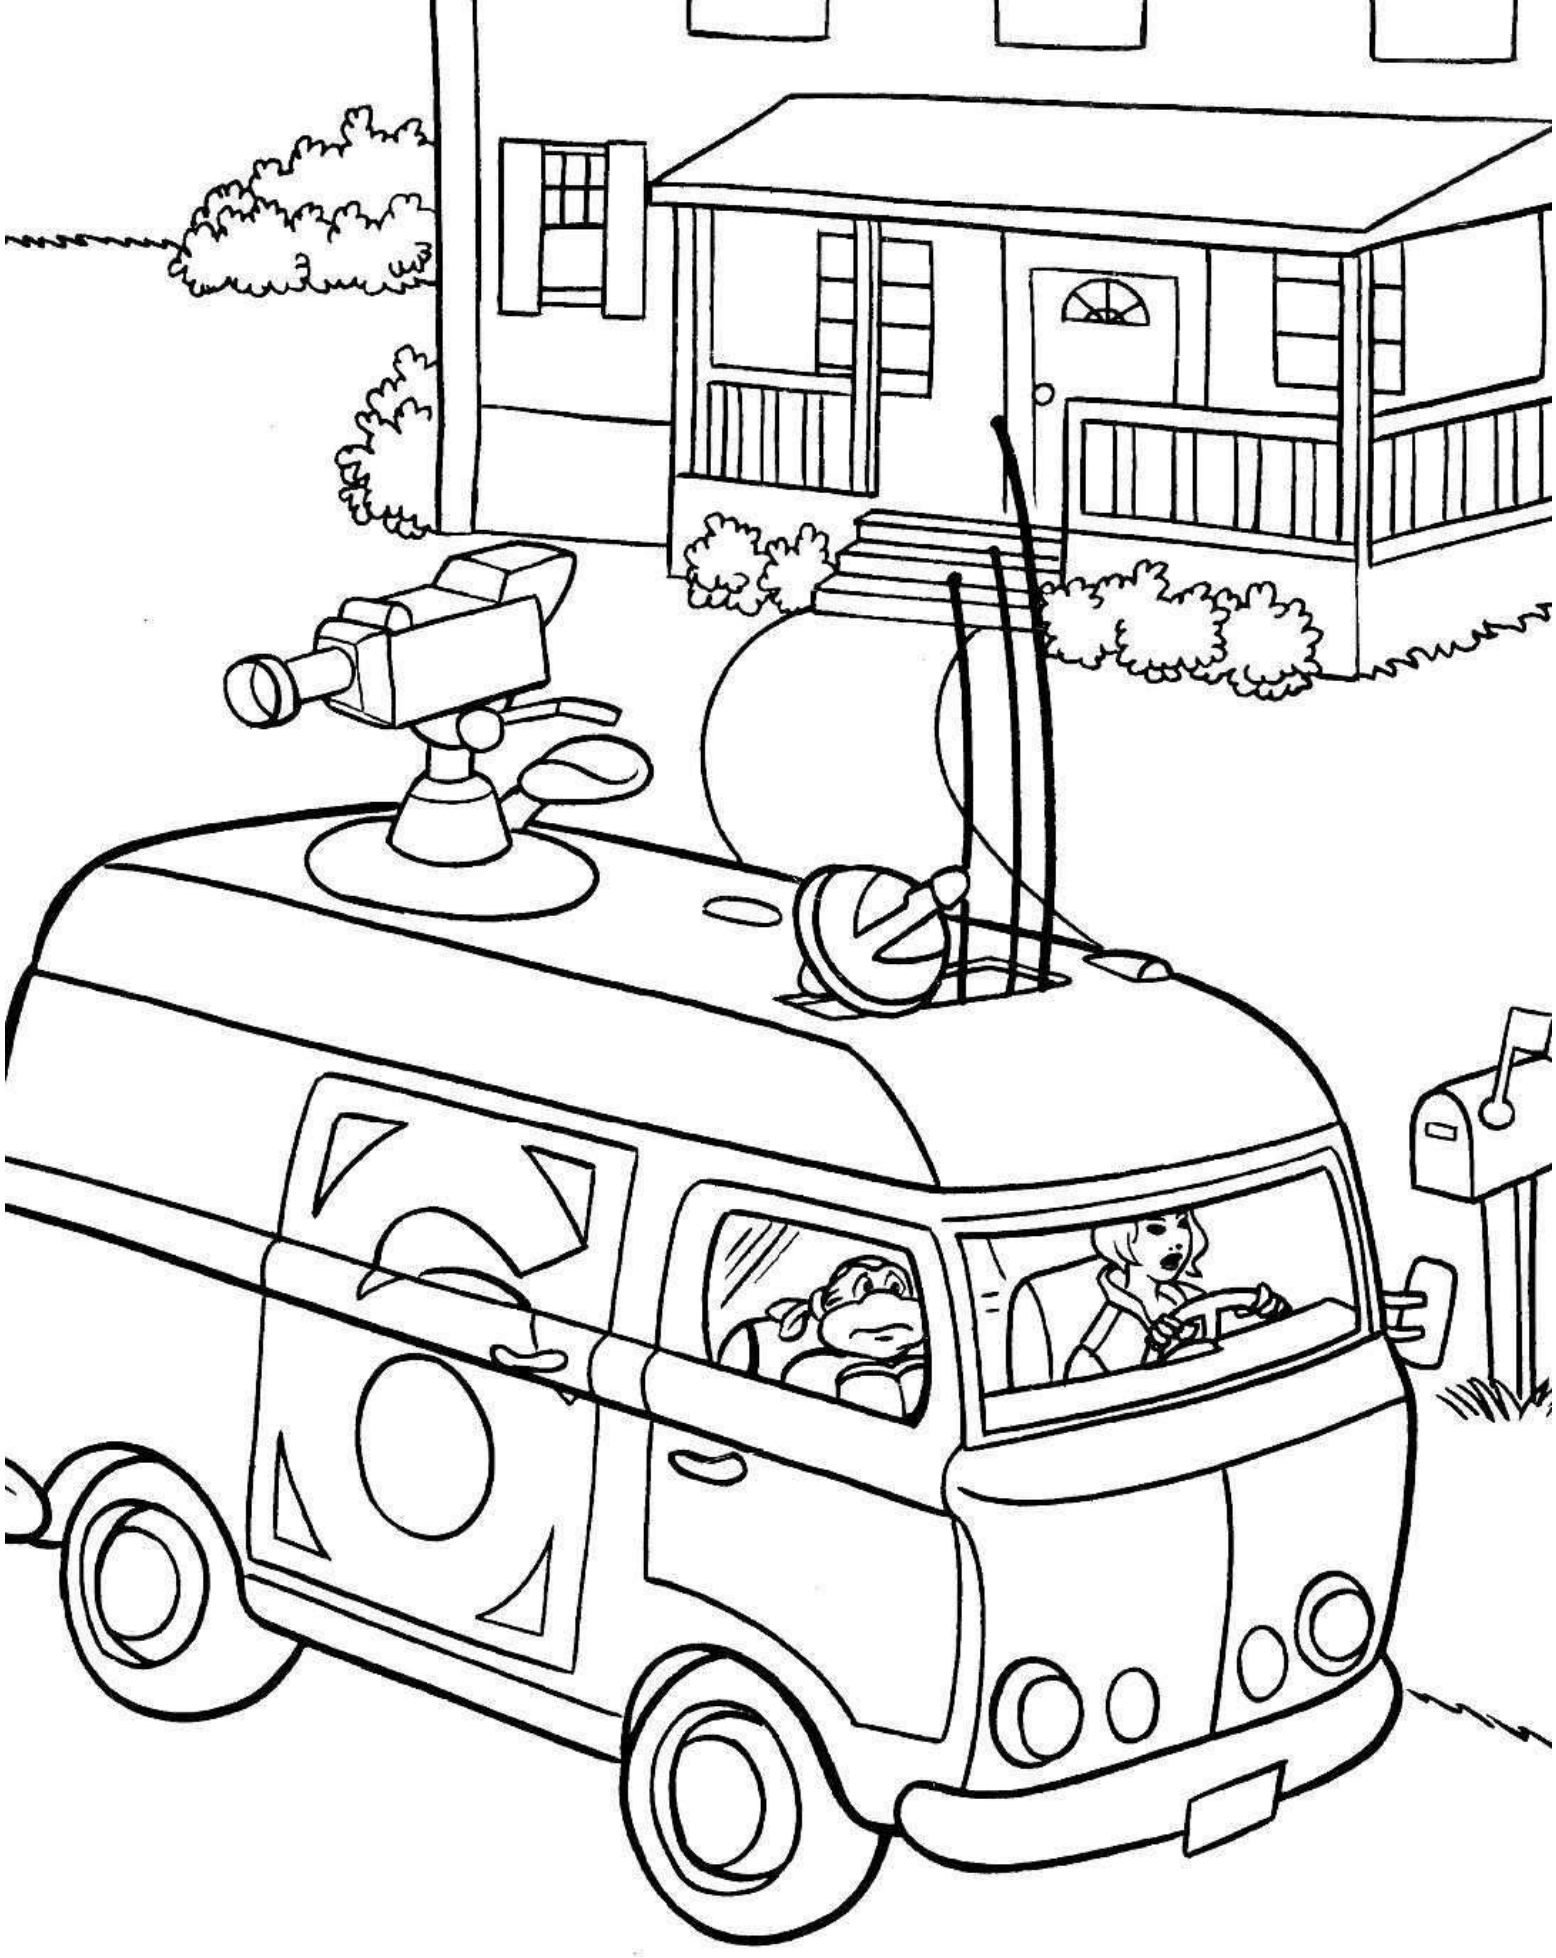
The ninjas fought the turtles until the floor collapsed beneath them!

"We've gotta get out of here!" cried Leonardo.

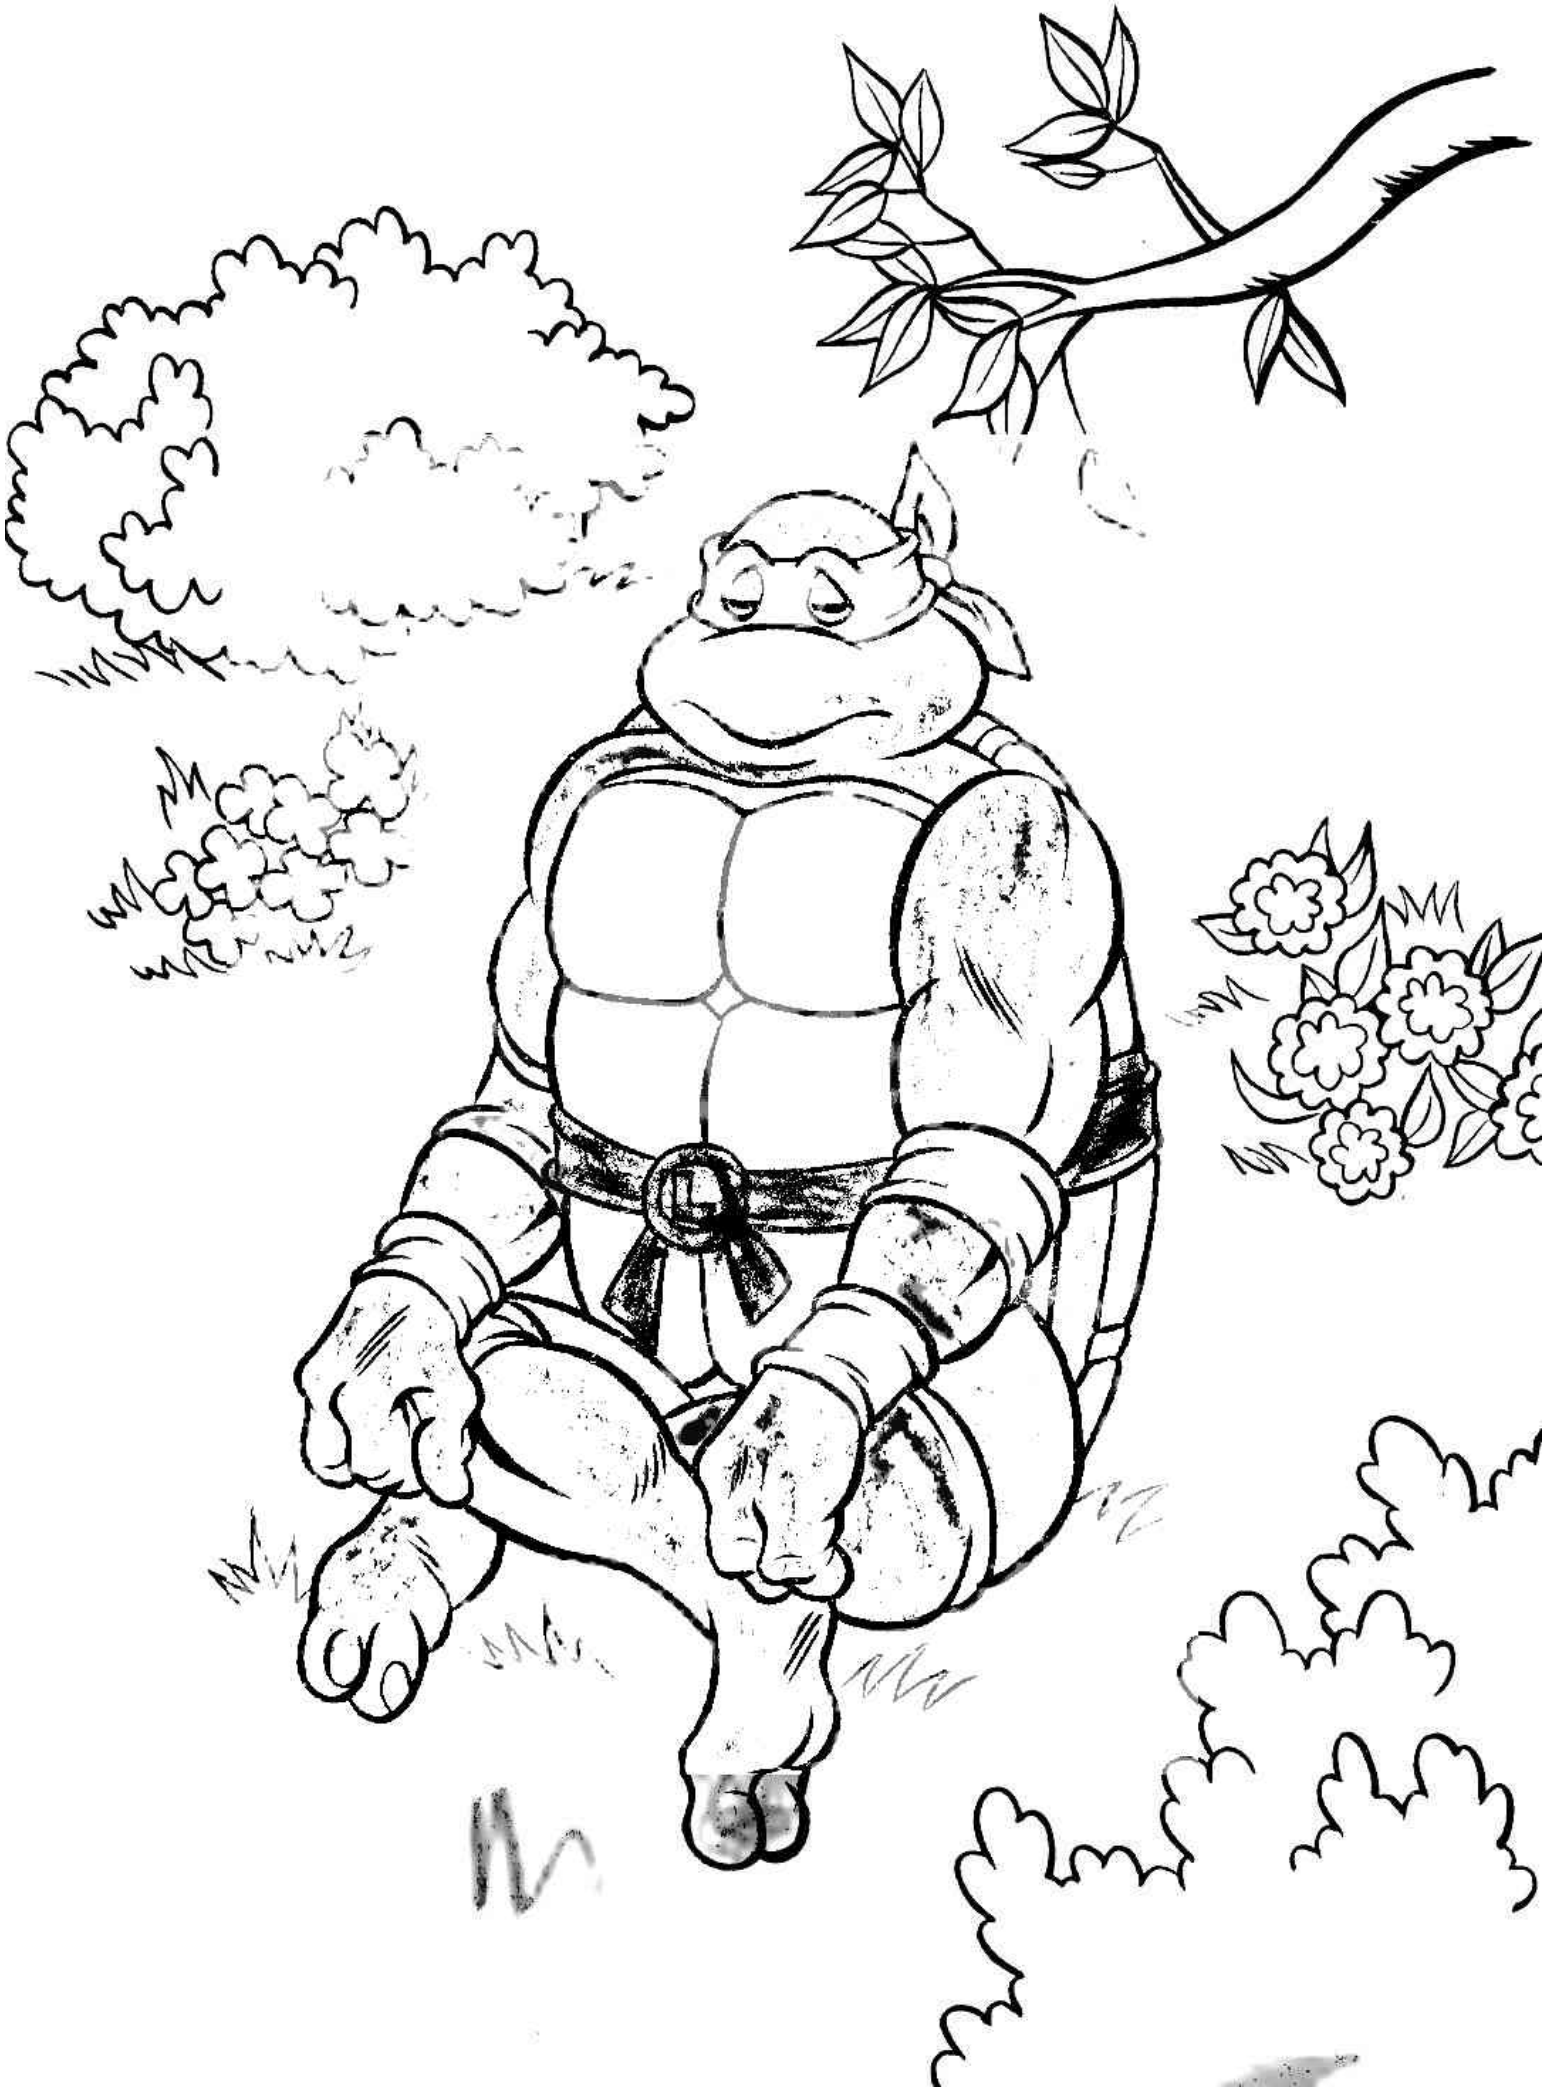
"I know a secret exit," said April, pushing aside some boxes.



April drove the turtles to her family's farmhouse. Raphael was still knocked out cold.

With care, Raphael got better. But the turtles were still very sad. They all felt they had let Splinter down.

Leonardo began to meditate in the woods. He thought as hard as he could about Splinter.



One day while he was meditating, he heard a voice.
"Leonardo..." it whispered. It was Splinter's voice.

Leonardo gathered the turtles beside a bonfire to meditate. "Concentrate hard," he told them.

The turtles tried as hard as they could. And then, out of the flames, appeared the image of Splinter.

"My sons," said Splinter. "There is nothing you cannot do if you believe. The force that brought me here tonight can help you do anything."

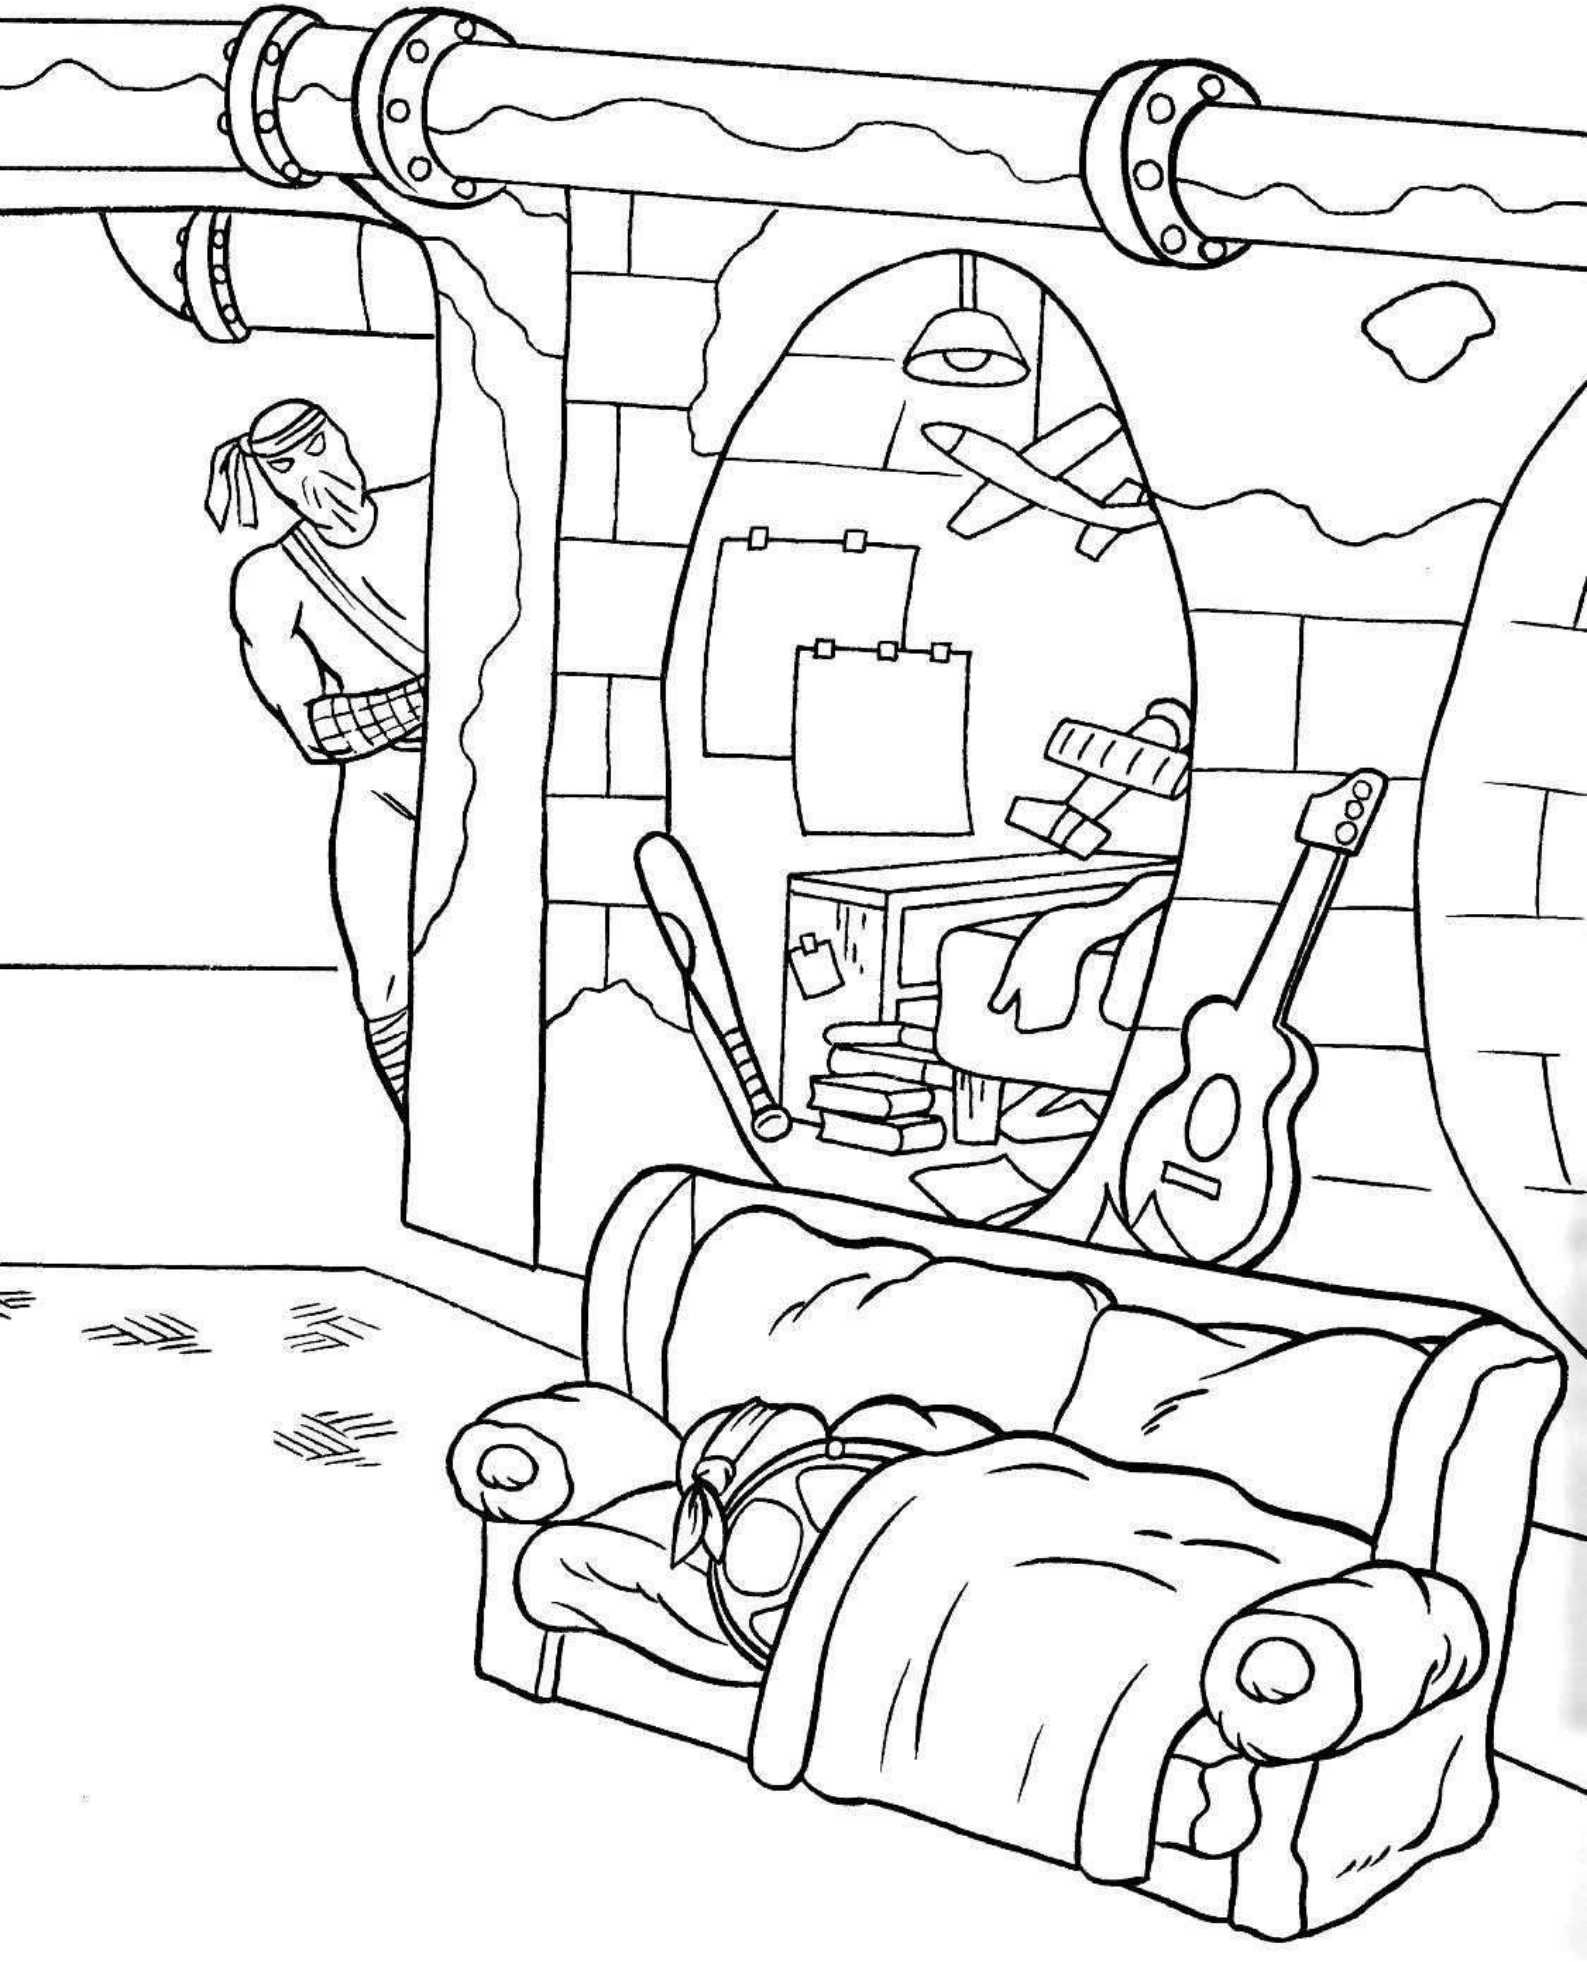
The next day the turtles practiced with their weapons. Leonardo turned his mask around so that he couldn't see. "Attack me now," he ordered his brothers.

"Leo, what're you doing?" asked Raphael. "You'll get hurt."

"Attack me now!" said Leonardo, and he knocked the sai from Raphael's hand.

One by one, the turtles attacked their brother. One by one, Leonardo knocked their weapons to the ground.

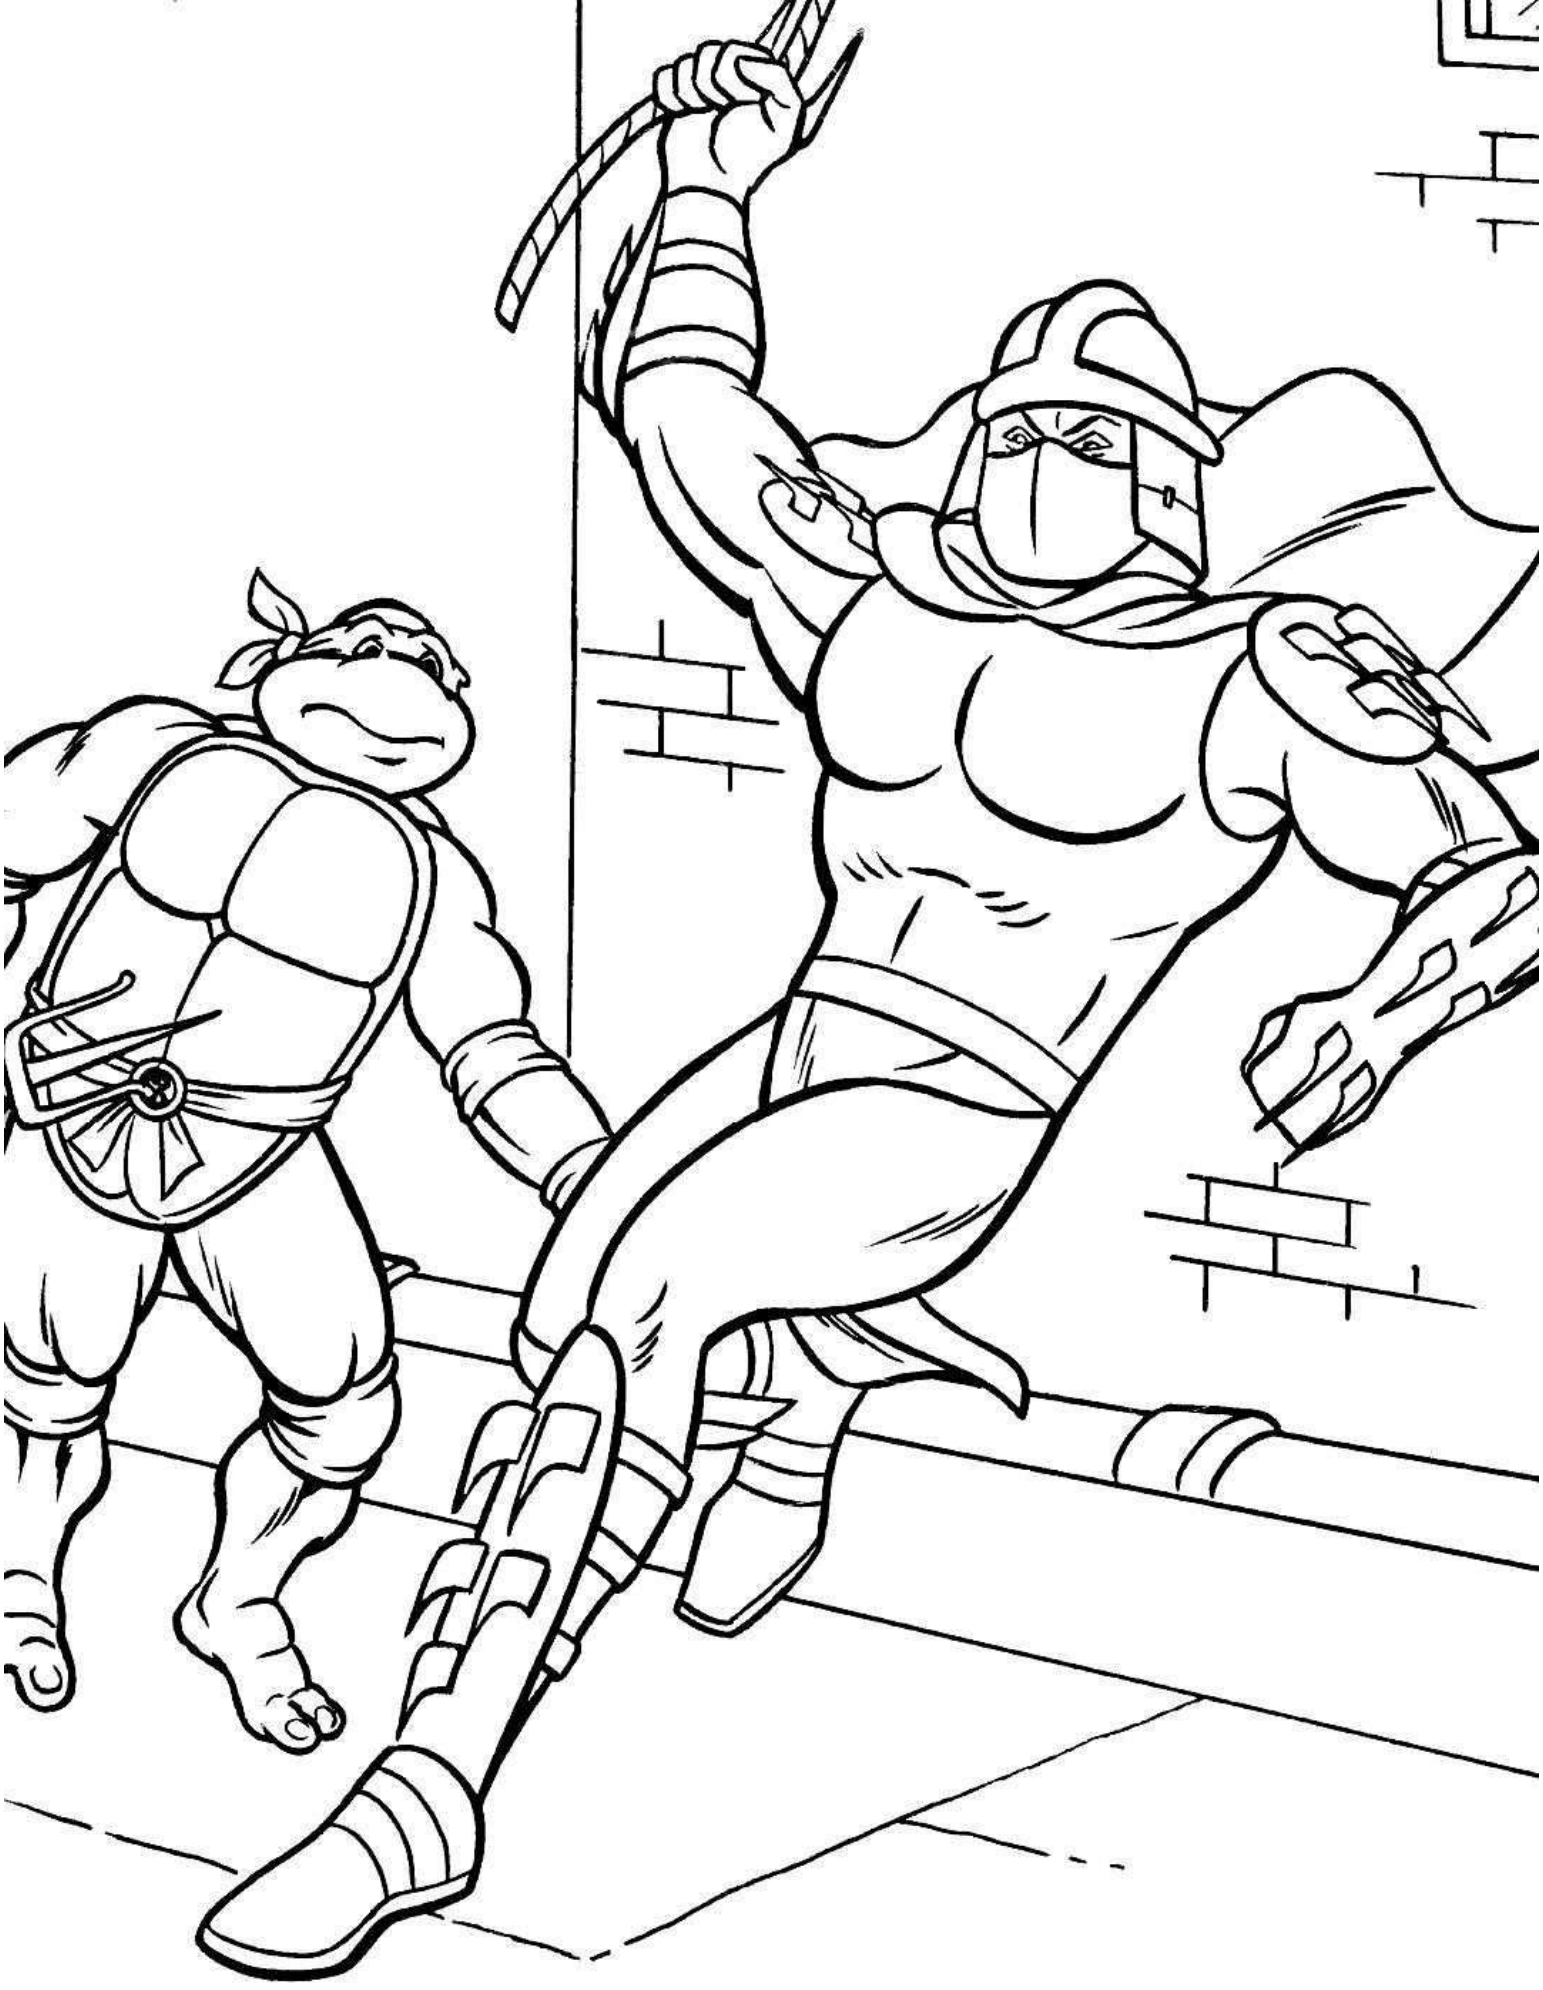
Leonardo turned around his mask. "I believe," he said, "that it is time we returned home."



Back at their sewer home the turtles had just gone to sleep when a shadowy figure appeared in the darkness.

The figure was one of Shredder's ninja gang. "So they're back," said Shredder when he heard the news. "This time I will get those turtles myself."

When Shredder's gang arrived at the turtles' home, it was empty. Suddenly a huge blast of steam filled the room.



The turtles burst out of hiding and began fighting. The battle moved onto the street and up a fire escape. And then, without warning, the Shredder leapt down from the building next door.

"I bet he knows where Splinter is!" said Leonardo, pointing to Shredder.

"The rat?" laughed Shredder. "I know where he is. I just killed him!"

Leonardo flew at Shredder in a rage.
"Mistake, freak..." said Shredder as he knocked
Leonardo to the ground and aimed a bo at his chest.

"Shredder!" a voice called out.
It was Splinter. Shredder had lied. The rat was alive.

"Death comes to us all," Splinter cried, "but something worse awaits you..." With lightning speed, Splinter wrapped his nunchakus around Shredder's bo. Shredder stumbled backward off the roof...

...and into the open jaws of a garbage truck.

"A fitting end for one without honor," said Splinter as the turtles gathered beside him.
